Boy Really Father of Man, Says This Writer

Boys are really fathers of their dad if the latter are conscientious parents, according to Frederic Van de Water, in Woman's Home Companion.

Fathers begin, he explains, by assuming a slightly attitude to impress the youth by example, but they soon find that the youngsters are catching them in the very things they preach against.

"As months march past I find myself dissembling less," says the writer. "Besides expurgating my speech and standing when women enter, I have acquired other virtues. I fold my napkin after each meal. I am polite over the telephone. I hang up my overcoat and I wipe out the tub after my bath. My son does few of these things without prompting, but, anyway, he will not be able to say that he observed his father in a similar offense."

"By the time he is twenty he will be pretty much like other men of his age. I have no illusions in that direction. But I am certain of one thing: By the time he is twenty I shall be a well-bred, well-groomed, tolerant, diligent man and I shall have him to thank for it."

World Always Set to Give Welcome to Joke
In these days of modern rapid transportation nothing travels faster and farther than a new joke. Its appearance is as welcome as the birth of an heir in an old-fashioned kingdom, and it is started on a dizzy circle in a twinkling of an eye.

By the time the joke has reached the farthest confines of the globe it is the latest and the best of the world's jokes.

The new joke, perhaps, comes out modestly and timidly in a newspaper or magazine. It is quickly seized and reproduced by a thousand more. It next appears in radio programs; it passes on to the vaudeville stage, and after it is supposed to have jumped the ocean it finds its old friends by turning up in the daily comic strips.

Of course, it never gets away from the after-dinner speakers. There is nothing so much in demand as bright new jokes—the common property of all—and there is never overproduction. It is a real benefactor of humanity who contributes to the world a good joke.

—Logansport Pharos Tribune.

Rich Richard
After all these years it is revealed that Ben Franklin—who said it was hard for an empty sack to stand on end, and a stitch in time saves nine, and "early to bed and early to rise"

—Springfield Union.

Her Part
A mother returned from shopping one day and was met by her small daughter.

"Well, what's my little Sheila been doing today?" she asked.

"I've been playing Cinderella," said Sheila.

"And you've been Cinderella, I suppose," said Sheila's mother.

"I guess not," said Sheila decidedly. "I've got lots of clothes; I was two two sisters."—Springfield Union.

Daughter Taken for Debs
One of the scandals of Lohola is the fact that if a man gets into debt his creditors can take away his daughter in payment. Many girls thus taken are mere children. They become the man's slaves until they are marriageable, when they join his wives. From babyhood almost they learn to regard him as their future lord. Their life is indescribable. South Africa, together with 55 other nations, agreed to abolish slavery, but the "debt children" seem to be overlooked, for the custom prevails.

First British Battleship
The British battleship, called Great Harry, is said to be the first ship which, strictly speaking, belonged to the royal navy. It was built in 1488 and had three masts and as late as the year 1545 was the only ship of that build in the English fleet. It is stated that she was accidentally burned at Woolwich in 1553. She was built during the reign of Henry VII and was probably called the Great Harry for his nickname, which was Harry.

Companionate Marriage

Oh, Sammy Dub and Sadie Flub
Are nothing else but nifty.
They're married on the latest plan--
A scheme of fifty-fifty.
Companionate they choose to mate,
So while they love and cuddle
They always know if they want to go
They can terminate the huddle.

The Judge said "Presto!" Flub and Dub
You're temporarily married.
Fight, fair or you two apt to be Companionately buried!
So Sam and Sadie tried it out
But daily grew more scrappy.
Both were too independent
To be settled down and happy.

Nice kids! I hope they stick it out
And then perhaps some day
Marry each other over again
In the good old permanent way!

Resolutions

Whereas, it has pleased the Master of the Great Grange above to remove our midst our respected brother N. Bartlett.

Resolved, that we bow to the Divine and cherish in fond remembrance and loyalty for many of our brother, and that we extend our deep sympathy to the members of his family.

Respectfully submitted,
F. E. RUSSELL,
BENJ. KIMBALL,
MRS. JASPER CATES,
Committee, Bethel Grange.

Resolutions

Whereas, in His infinite Mercy Our only Father has seen fit to remove loved sister from our midst, we are that, in the passing of Sister Farwell, Alder River Grange loses a valuable member, who has been in the work many years; always a kind and generous member. We shall miss the memory of our sister who goes to her reward.

shall we grasp her vanished hand and again the gladness of her eyes share with her the better land more to say good-bye.

Resolved that our charter be draped mourning for thirty days, that a be set apart in our minutes as a day of love and esteem, and a copy of these resolutions be given to the family, also one published in the Oxford County Citizen.

Congress Finishes Up Much Legislation and Ends the Special Session.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

DETERMINED to bring the special session to a close before the fourth of July, congress was very busy the first part of the week, clearing up the pending legislation. Taking up the new World War veterans bill passed by the house, the senate again showed its utter disregard for President Hoover's views and its keen desire for votes next fall. It loaded the measure down with amendments, chief of which was one increasing the pension rates to the Spanish war level. Another would permit veterans who contracted venereal diseases during their war service to obtain disability allowances.

The bill was sent to conference for elimination of the features that would be most objectionable to the President. Among the bills passed by the house was the Wickersham commission's border patrol bill designed to help in curbing the smuggling of liquor from Canada and Mexico. It establishes an enlarged and unified border patrol service in the treasury under the assistant secretary in charge of the coast guard, increases the number of entry stations, and makes it a misdemeanor, subject to $100 fine, to cross the border except at an entry station, with certain exceptions.

The senate passed the house bill which authorized the President to consolidate and coordinate governmental activities affecting the war veterans. SECRETARY of the Treasury Mellon announced that the fiscal year 1930 closed with a surplus in the treasury of $181,000,000. This amount represented the difference between receipts and expenditures. The public debt was reduced during the year by $716,000,000. There was a net balance in the general fund at the close of the year of $214,000,000.

While the surplus was substantial, the same as in the fiscal year 1929, Secretary Mellon pointed out that it included the abnormal sum of $76,000,000 paid by foreign governments in June in cash instead of in securities of the American government and also included abnormal customs receipts, due to anticipation of tariff legislation. SENATORS JOHNSON of California, Moses of New Hampshire and Robinson of Indiana filed with the senate their minority report from the foreign relations committee, setting forth their reasons for opposing ratification of the London naval treaty. These reasons are already well known to the public and need not be repeated.

Dispatches from Washington said that the national defense committee of the American Legion had made a report two weeks previously recommending that the Legion declare for rejection of the treaty, and that nothing more had been heard of the matter. One rumor was that administration influences had succeeded in bringing about the pigeonholing of the report.

Over in London two of England's most famous naval commanders, Earl Beatty and Earl Jellicoe, made hot attacks on the treaty, asserting that by signing it their government was throwing away "the sea power by which the British empire came into being and developed into what it is today."

PRESIDENT HOOVER has named as head of the new federal power commission Lieut. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, who in his service as chief of army engineers gained a thorough knowledge of the waterways of the country. His nomination, with those of the other four commission members, will be sent to the senate in special session this summer for confirmation. When two members have taken office the new commission will supplant the old one, which had as its members the secretaries of war, interior and agriculture, and which, since 1920, has supervised the expenditure of about $250,000,000 for power development.

In the new commission applications for power plants are to be placed in the hands of five $10,000 a year men who, the act stipulates, may have no other occupation. Nor may they have been connected in any way with, or hold any stock in, power companies. At present 70 applications are pending with the commission.

IN A radio address to the governors' conference which met in Salt Lake City, President Hoover announced that federal, state and local governments had spent or contracted to spend a total of $1,700,000,000 for public works during the first six months of the present calendar year. This figure, he said, exceeded by over $200,000,000 that of the boom year of 1929. He advised the governors that there is still need for "continued serious effort" in every state and community to bring an early business recovery, and to reduce unemployment.

Several of the western governors delivered addresses scoring the federal government for its invasion of states' rights, especially with regard to the public domain, unappropriated lands, and mineral and oil rights.

PROHIBITION enforcement was transferred July 1 from the Treasury department to the Department of Justice, and Attorney General Mitchell became the commander in chief of the federal dry army with Col. Amos W. Woodcock as his chief of staff. It was understood in Washington that the government's limited staff and appropriation will be devoted hereafter to detecting larger commercial bootlegging, while the effort to obtain greater co-operation by the states will be expanded. Many changes have been made already in the force of prohibition administrators, the most important being in the metropolitan areas of New York and Chicago. In the former Maj. Maurice Campbell resigned when ordered to Boston to take charge of alcohol permits and gave out a statement attacking "United States attorneys with political aspirations," and Treasury department officials who "have not been sincere in efforts to enforce this law."

He declared his experience had led him to the following conclusion: "Prohibition is not the logical solution for temperance under our form of government, and I now publicly advocate the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment before the nation is consumed in the fires of its consequences."

Col. John H. J. Herbert became the enforcement boss of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, displacing E. C. Feltowley, who remains in control of alcohol permits in that state.

CONGRESSMAN B. E. DENISON of Illinois, a dry Republican who was indicted on a charge of illegally possessing liquor because of a leaking suitcase, escaped being tried when Justice Gordon of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia sustained a demurrer and held that the indictment failed to particularize the charge against Denison sufficiently to enable the latter to frame a defense and plead an acquittal as a bar to a subsequent indictment.

WITH the stroke of midnight on June 30 the last of the French troops of occupation departed from the Rhineland and Germany was freed from the incubus that had rested on it for almost twelve years. The German people celebrated the event with the ringing of bells, with great parades of singing men and women, with the playing of bands and with fireworks. Especially impressive was the jubilee in the town of Speyer in the Palatinate. Torches and flares lighted the bridge across the Rhine over which marched the town's police force of 600 men as thousands along the water's edge and in boats sang "Deutschland über Alles."

The final phase of the military evacuation began in Wiesbaden at 9:30 o'clock in the morning. The international Rhineland commission, which had headquarters at Wiesbaden since September when the headquarters were moved from Cologne, closed shop. A battalion of French troops lined up on Kaiserstrasse in front of the commission's building where three flags floated—British, British and French. The regimental band broke into the "Brabanconne" and the Belgian flag slowly descended. Then the military band played "God Save the King" and the Union Jack slid down the hill. It was a tense moment as the strains of the "Marseillaise" burst into the air and the tricolor floated down.

High Commissioner Paul Tirard and the other officials crossed the Rhine bridge in motors and a thousand French soldiers in full war panoply marched to the railroad station and entrained for home.

A proclamation by President Von Hindenburg said:

"After years of bitter distress, after the acceptance of oppressive burdens, we have regained for the Rhineland a freedom that we shall preserve for the welfare and future of our fatherland."

"Therefore, in this solemn hour, let us be united in the pledge, Deutschland über alles."

ALMOST before the outside world knew anything about it, there was a successful revolution down in Bolivia, caused by the alleged efforts of Hernando Siles, resigned president, to regain the office of chief executive and hold it in perpetuity. Troops led by Gen. Carlos Blanco Galindo occupied La Paz, the capital, after a hot fight, and Siles and his friends fled or took refuge in foreign legations. The military junta took charge of the government and announced financial and other plans for the immediate restoration of the republic to its normal condition on a constitutional basis. It was understood that free elections would be held and a new president designated in such a manner that he cannot perpetuate himself in office.

The populace in La Paz was delighted with the success of the revolutionary movement, and great crowds surrounded the Brazilian legation which sheltered Siles, demanding that he be given up for trial by the courts. Gen. Hans Kundt, German chief of staff of the Bolivian army, who was accused not only of aiding Doctor Siles, but of Prussianizing the Bolivian forces, fled to the German legation. General Galindo took steps to protect all the former officials from violence.

GREAT BRITAIN is taking relentless measures to end the "passive" rebellion in India. The latest of these was the arrest of Pandit Motilal Nehru, a Hindu and acting president of the All-India national congress, and Sayed Mahmud, a Moslem, secretary of the congress. They were tried immediately and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. These arrests created a great sensation throughout India and a hartal or cessation of all work was proclaimed in protest. In Bombay a "boycott week" was started and some were urged to refrain from paying British goods.

The spirit of the Nationalists seems far from broken. In many cities the school students, both boys and girls, have joined the movement, quitting their schools, holding parades and assisting in the picketing of British shops.

AMERICANS of 23 countries gathered in Paris with Frenchmen to celebrate the Franco-American committee's "week of American nations," and Raymond Poincare, former president and former premier, took the United States to task for its new tariff law. M. Poincare presided at a dinner to national delegates.

"There is a crisis in the friendship of the two nations which if not remedied promptly will grow worse," he said. "Countries that try to antagonize other peoples will find that they are attached to those other peoples by bonds they cannot break."

TWO tents in aviation marked the week. First Roger Q. Williams with two companions made a nonstop flight from New York to Bermuda and back in the Columbia, the transatlantic Bellanca monoplane, in 17 hours and 8 minutes. Second, John and Kenneth Hunter of Spain, Ill., smashed to smithereens the refueling endurance record over Sky Harbor airport north of Chicago. They refused to come down until the motor of their plane was worn out.

several months and is in Maine for his health.

Mrs. Myrtie Kneeland Phillips, her daughter, Theresa and son, James, two young friends and the grandmother, Mrs. John Phillips of Woodford, opened the old Kneeland house on Monday for the summer. Miss Phillips has just completed her second year in Emerson College of Oratory in Boston, Mass. John Phillips, the older son, spent the Fourth of July holidays with his family here. He is working for the Palm Olive Soap Co. during the summer.

Henry Merrill of Bethel is working on the Payson Farm. He boards with his brother, Alfred Merrill going to his work on his motorcycle.

Mr. and Mrs. John Craig and son, Vernon of Farmington, with his aunts, Mrs. Orrie Monroe and Miss Maude Atherton enjoyed a picnic on Mutiny Brook the Fourth.

Week end guests of Mrs. Martha P. Perry were Edgar Sargent and his mother, of Dorchester, Mass., with Miss Fannie Lyman of Watertown, Mass., a niece of Mrs. Perry's.

The various camps in our vicinity have opened for the season this past week.

Dorothy Holden and Mrs. Ben Collins were in Lewiston on Wednesday for permanent waves. Louise Stone of Watford drove the car for them.

Clinton Goodwin has gone to Harrison to work for the summer. His aunt, Helen Stevens, is in Harrison as cook during the summer months.

The strawberry crop in this section was nearly a failure. The drought early in the season must have been the cause.

"Camp Wigwag" had a fine display of fireworks on the Fourth of July. They could be seen some distance.

Waterford Creamery is very busy these days pasteurizing milk for the camps.

On the night before the Fourth there was quite a chimney fire at the York Farm. Early in the evening it caught from the fire in the fire place. At bed time it was thought to be out. In the morning at 3 a. m. they were awakened by smoke. Mr. Rogers found flames pouring from the chimney. He and Charlie Crowe kept the roofs wet so no damage was done.

It was quiet here during the Fourth.

Many attended the celebration at Lynchville and Bridgton.

Dr. Ness and wife were recent guests in the home of W. W. Abbott. Dr. Ness is the State Veterinarian. He was to test Mr. Abbott's herd of Jersey cows. Mrs. J. B. Biggs spent the week in North Bridgton with relatives. Mrs. Charles remains about the same.

Although William Penn founded the city, there were a few Swedes who settled there before him. One of the first things they did on settling was to build a church which is shown above. It was called Old Swedes Church and is the oldest religious organization of that city to-day.

along and now I know it. Crosby, wireless for government help. "Do you mean to tell me you are taking these drunken ravings seriously?" It was Clements who spoke. "I mean I'll have a gunboat alongside by noon; that's what I mean. Go below." He advanced threateningly to Clements. Bettington interposed. He tried the calm, conciliatory tone. "I shall be cleared of these absurd charges," he began, "but—" "What charges have I made?" Hallett snapped, interrupting. "Well, haven't you threatened to put me in irons?" "You can't mean to call in outside aid," Clements said. "Why not?" "What would people say? You'd be laughed at in every port." "Be reasonable," Bettington broke in. He understood the danger of the moment too well. "You're right to be angry with this fool's chatter, but what you propose to do is too despotical and arbitrary. You must have Mrs. Radway's authorization first."

"You'd talk her over too—n quick to suit me. You're the kind who's used to hiding behind petticoats. There's a short and ugly word to describe your kind of crook."

Suddenly the sharp hiss of the wireless cut the air. Hallett smiled in triumph. "That settles you birds I think."

"Sam!" Clements called shrilly. "Here, Boss." Sam said, materializing. "Let no message be sent. Smash the instrument if necessary."

In a twinkling Sam had hurried himself into the wireless room. The hissing was stilled. Then the two lads were thrown violently out. Bob rose instantly, but Crosby Todd lay motionless. Hallett looked about him and saw the sinister faces of those who made up his crew. They had come upon him unawares. The deck seemed alive with them.

Todd rose painfully from the deck and stood with Bob at the captain's side. These three opposed the rest, conscious of the hazard which was involved, yet clinging to a hope that authority could quell insurrection.

Bettington stood apart from these two groups. He had seen the coming of tragedy when Graumann's drunken babble had turned Hallett's justifiable suspicion into certain knowledge. No action or word of his could avert the destiny he feared. He watched the men grouping themselves behind Clements. He could see that they were awaiting his word.

Hallett, obstinate, unseeing and blindly at the mercy of his own prejudices, showed, in this fearful moment, his quality of courage. Not for a moment was he led to think of compromise. He was captain and would not be a lesser man.

"By G—d," he cried, "this is mutiny!"

The spectacle of Clements stirred him into violent action. "You grinning deek rat," he shouted, "I've got the right sort of medicine for mutineers."

Leary Fell Across the Body of His Leader.

not to catch Hallett so easily. Leary fell across the body of his leader. "Back to the companion, boys," Hallett yelled.

Menacing the crowd with the weapon, the three sought the companion. It was Hallett's misfortune, born of his hatred to retreat, that he lingered a few seconds too long. It gave Sam time to pull the automatic from Clements' pocket and fire twice. It was a difficult shot for so short-barreled a weapon, and Bettington thought the bullets must have gone wide. He saw that as Sam leveled the gun, Hallett recognized the danger and turned.

"Well, Doc?" Sam demanded, when Bettington had knelt by Clements. "Not a chance," he returned. "He was killed instantly."

None loathed about Leary, who had followed his chief in death, as in life. For the moment none realized in the greater loss that there was no other member of the yacht's crew competent to work out reckonings or set a course.

When Mrs. Radway at Bettington's suggestion went below with Mary, she experienced a sudden nervousness and uncertainty which she tried to keep from the girl.

Very calmly she seated herself at the grand piano and began to play. "It will be all right," she assured Mary. "One of the men had been drinking. That was all."

As she spoke there were the sounds of many steps, and men, upon whom the women had not before cast their eyes, came crowding one upon the other. Only one looked at Mrs. Radway shuddered at his gaze. It was the insolent scrutiny to which she had been subjected at her husband's burial service. Metzger stood there with what he felt was an attitude that must impress them. His eyes blazed with some internal excitement. Sam had told him the fat was in the fire. He took off his cap with a sweep, smiled and passed to the upper deck.

"What a horrible man," Mary whispered as he disappeared.

She had never seen such a high color in her companion's cheek.

"Then two pistol shots rang out. 'Quick,' said Mrs. Radway, 'they will be coming this way.'"

Hardly had they crossed to the door leading to the sleeping quarters of the owner and guests, before two more reports were heard. Hastily they closed the steel partition and waited. Steps, hurried steps, were heard and there was a hammering on the door.

"It's Bob's voice," said Mary. She opened the door and her brother, Crosby Todd, and the captain entered.

"Mutiny!" said Bob. He felt himself thrill as he uttered the word which on shipboard may have so disastrous a meaning.

Mrs. Radway wondered why the captain made no report to her. Was he the sort of man to be silent in the presence of his own ship, of such dangers as these? And, while the rest were standing, he had dropped heavily to a settee in the corridor.

There was a terrifying lack of resentment and courage in his face. And as she looked closer, she saw that the rudely colored faded. She knew in that moment he was badly hurt.

"Oh, what is it?" she cried, wringing her hands.

"The got me, m'm," he said slowly. "I've a ball in the back and one of 'em pined a lung." There was blood on his face and on his pallid lips. He pitched face foremost to the ground.

"Doc—or Walte must be fetched. Mrs. Radway exclaimed.

"Not him, not him," said Hallett faintly. "It's one of them. God knows I warned you about him, m'm. Two of a kind, I said, and I was right."

In a few moments he was dead. "Courage us, faithful and wholly honest, he had done more harm in his dying than in all his life before. Unwittingly, he had given his employer and Mrs. Radway to the mercy of those who had no Clements' restraint or calculated humanity.

That his aspersions of the surgeon were semi-deliberate ravings induced by old prejudices was Mrs. Radway's simple and unhesitating belief.

She noticed with surprise that Crosby Todd was talking almost angrily to Mary.

"Now," he said bitterly, "perhaps you'll believe I was right. I know he was not what he pretended to be."

"Really, Mr. Todd," Mrs. Radway said, with a touch of hauteur, "you must not let this trouble make you unjust."

"Unjust?" he cried. "Unjust! Mrs. Radway, there's no other explanation. Ask Bob, if you won't believe me. Didn't he stand there alone, watching the whole thing as if he'd planned it?"

Mrs. Radway turned to the younger lad. He had never seen her look so sternly. "Well," she demanded.

"It did look that way," Bob stammered. There had been, from his way of thinking, some justification for his friend's outburst. The doctor had not sprung to their side when the two opposing groups had formed. But he had not joined the mutineers either.

"They all started when there was a knock on the door."

"Who is it?" Todd called.

"Doctor Walte," came the answer; there was a perceptible hesitation in it.

"Keep out," shouted Todd angrily. "There's no place for you here."

Mrs. Radway motioned him to be silent; she unlocked the door.

The doctor was looking at the dark stains on the light-colored carpet.

"Who's been hurt?" he demanded.

"Some one's been murdered," Crosby Todd cried angrily, "and you know who did it."

Bettington paid him no attention. He sighed and shook his head. Then he rose slowly.

"That's the third to die in ten minutes," he announced.

"And whose fault is it?" Todd snarled.

"What has happened?" Mrs. Radway asked anxiously.

"I can hardly tell yet," he said. "But I am afraid there is great danger for us all. Keep this door locked and let none enter. You might see that the windows are shut."

"Are you in danger?" Evelyn Radway asked. There was a look in her eyes which told of anxiety for his safety.

"Not yet," he said; "they think I am with them; but hunting with the hounds and running with the fox is a dangerous game." There was a tenderness in his smile which he had not dared to show before.

Perhaps he was aware that this flaming antagonism of the wireless operator was not to be fought successfully, for he neither spoke to him nor looked in his direction. But he turned to the younger man.

"Bob," he said gravely, "there are two women for you to protect. You must take no foolish risks. Stay here until I come back. Start by seeing after the windows. If your friend won't do it."

Very cautiously he unlocked the door and left them. For all Bettington knew he was going to his death, and who would there be to look after the four he had just left?

CHAPTER IX

Bettington States His Terms

Neither Metzger nor Sam were on deck. They had retired to the accommodation aft, which had so lately been taken by the captain. They knew that the joint authority they were to exercise would not be disturbed by rivalries. They were not yet assured of the course to be taken. On the table before them they put their revolvers. Not in anticipation of disagreement, but rather lest Hallett might come in armed and ready to fight.

"I don't like this Andy Orme," said Metzger. "I don't like him any more than you do that young Sparks; who tots around with the girl."

It was curious that in the moment when grave danger seemed to involve them, Metzger thought only of Mrs. Radway. Sam lacked the volatile spirit of his companion.

"You'll have time enough for that," Sam said heavily. "That ain't worrying me. What are we going to do now?"

"We can sell this boat," Metzger asserted. "I told the doctor that, but he made excuses. He shall forge her papers. I know where I can find a Portuguese trader who will buy her. He will not give much, but buy her gives will be but he cut two ways."

The treachery to the others was agreeable to Sam. It was the only way out. They continued to discuss the situation. There was Hallett to reckon with and his two adherents. They would be warned directly he left the room where he was hidden. There was no danger to apprehend.

Bettington found Clements had been placed on a stateroom lounge. His faded blue eyes peered up into the bright sky; there were still the unfading smile on his face. Even death kept his secret. Perhaps none would ever know by what name in the world of crime he had been called.

A deckhand called Mike was on the level.

"Where's Sam?" Bettington asked.

"Went below with Metzger," Mike answered.

Bettington followed them. Metzger and Sam ceased their talk when he came in. They wondered if he had heard any of it. It was a discussion which should have interested any man concerned with the length of his days.

"Well," said Bettington, seating himself, "what's to be done now?"

Metzger elaborated on the simplicity of his scheme.

"The money would have to be split three ways and there'd be a little left over. I know men who will buy and ask no questions."

"You'll never sell the Albatross," Bettington asserted.

"Then I know where we can run her and live aboard. It's the Gulf of Nicoya in Costa Rica. There nobody would ever find us." Metzger's face beamed at the thought.

"That's silly," Bettington answered. "Do you suppose we all want to pass our days in the Gulf of Nicoya? You've got the wrong idea. You are afraid to go back to New York, I suppose?"

"Not for me!" said Sam. "The Pass never lied to us. When he said he knew all about us he was speaking the truth. I'm not going to run my neck into a noose."

"Doesn't the same fate hang over me? You know it does. I look on it in a different light. Nobody could know of Clements' death for a month, at least. He said the paper wasn't to be opened for a year. I'm willing to take a chance. We all want money, and a lot of it. Mrs. Radway will pay us just the same as she would have paid Clements and we don't have to share with him. Why throw it away? We ought to take it and then go where we'd be safe for life."

CHURCH ACTIVITIES

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
L. A. Edwards, Pastor
JULY 13TH

10:45 Morning worship. Subject of sermon by the pastor will be "The Excluded Christ".

When Mary and Joseph came to Bethlehem, there was no room for them in the inn. Jesus was born in a manger, because the inn was too crowded.

The keepers of the inn would have made room had they but known.

There was no room for Jesus in the Temple of His God that was presided over by the religious hierarchy.

In John's vision he sees the church of Laodicea and standing outside is the patient Christ. Why was He thus excluded from that church?

Are we not proud of the democratic spirit of the Congregational church? Are we not glad to throw open the doors to all classes? Does this fine spirit of democracy include Christ?

We shall be delighted to see our summer visitors at Church any Sunday morning. We appreciate your presence, and hope you may receive real benefit from coming.
